HOW TO SPEND A LONG WEEKEND IN ATLANTA, GA

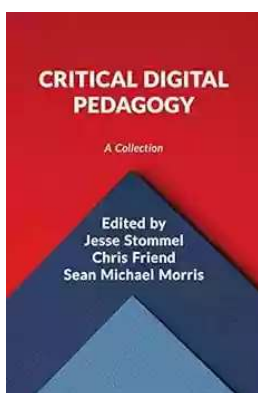

The funny thing about being “from Atlanta” is that you’re probably not; like me, you’re more likely from the metropolitan area and grew up somewhere in the suburbs (shoutout to West Cobb). But going downtown was always the thing to do on the weekends, whether to celebrate, see concerts and attend festivals, chow down on great food, or just spend time in the park—all a 30-minute drive from home (shorter than my current commute to work in NYC). Even though I no longer live down South, it's been magical to see the city grow so much over the past few years: Hotlanta, the Hollywood of the South, and the City Too Busy to Hate. While I can't even imagine what the traffic must be like now that people are getting so interested in visiting and living in Atlanta— the rent is low and the number of cars on the highway at rush hour somehow keeps on growing—I've never been prouder of where I come from and all the good music, good eats, and good times we get to show off to the world today.
