

Gift From Elsa Ww Stories For Dyslexics

Elsa Ww Stories have become a boon for dyslexic children, helping them overcome reading difficulties and embracing the joy of storytelling. These stories, specially designed and crafted for dyslexics, provide an engaging and inclusive reading experience that caters to their unique needs.

Understanding Dyslexia

Dyslexia is a learning disorder that affects reading, spelling, and writing abilities. Children with dyslexia often struggle with recognizing and manipulating the sounds in words, causing difficulties in decoding and reading fluently. This learning difference affects approximately 1 in 10 people worldwide, making it imperative to provide effective solutions tailored to their needs.

These were previously published by Oxford University Press in the Headwork series of readers. The stories were written by Michael Thomson who now retains the copyright and is self publishing them for you!

The stories are so called “High-Low” readers. That is of high interest but low reading age, or in other words with normal comprehension levels but easier to ‘decode’ or read. They were tried out on children at East Court, a school for dyslexic children and are aimed at an interest level of around 11-14. There are a range of genres from contemporary through fantasy, humour and true 2nd world war stories. They are written in 4 levels of basic reading difficulty starting around the 8 year reading age with level 1 being the easiest to read. However, the themes and interest level are all still at the 11-14 age range.
