Discovering the History Behind Glass Beach

Glass Beach was not always the enchanting sight it is today. In the early 20th century, it served as a dumping ground for local residents and businesses, who discarded their trash into the ocean. This practice continued until the early 1960s when it was banned.

Over the years, the crashing waves and natural elements transformed the discarded glass, pottery, and other debris into beautiful, tumbled pieces that washed up on the shore, creating a captivating sea glass spectacle. The original trash beach became a hidden gem, giving birth to what we now know as Glass Beach.
