Introducing Brown: Lolly's Best Friend and Partner in Crime

A few years after Lolly joined our family, we felt that she needed a playmate. We visited a local shelter and came across an adorable ginger cat named Brown. He had an adventurous twinkle in his eyes and a mischievous grin that instantly struck a chord with us.

Bringing Brown home turned out to be one of the best decisions we ever made. Lolly and Brown became inseparable. They chased each other all over the house, played hide-and-seek, and even formed a secret alliance against common enemies – the fast-moving toys and laser pointers! Their love for each other was evident in every purr, every head bump, and every shared nap under the warm afternoon sun.

Lolly Brown: Our Dynamic Duo's Quirks and Individual Personalities

While Lolly and Brown make a perfect team, they have distinctive personalities that complement each other wonderfully.

Lolly, the eldest of the duo, is a charming little lady with a mischievous streak. She loves to hide in unexpected places, always keeping us on our toes. Lolly has also mastered the art of "the puppy-dog eyes," which she uses effortlessly to get extra treats. Don't be fooled by her petite size; she's incredibly agile and can jump to great heights without breaking a sweat.

Brown, on the other hand, is a true daredevil. Fearlessly, he leaps from one surface to another, testing the laws of gravity with every jump. He has an insatiable curiosity for the outside world and spends hours observing birds and squirrels through our living room window. Brown is also an expert cuddler, always ready to provide warmth and comfort whenever needed.

The Adventures of Lolly and Brown: From Epic Toy Wars to Naptime Bliss

Living with Lolly and Brown is like having a daily dose of pure entertainment. Their playful antics know no bounds and always manage to put a smile on our faces.

One of their favorite pastimes is engaging in epic toy wars. Watching them pounce on their colorful prey, fiercely batting them across the room, and then triumphantly carrying them in their mouths brings endless joy to our household. It's as if they have their own little battlefield, where no toy is left unturned.

Despite the constant excitement, Lolly and Brown know how to unwind. Their naptime rituals are nothing short of adorable. They often curl up together, creating a cozy little ball of fur that radiates warmth and tranquility. Observing their synchronized breathing and peaceful expressions is a beautiful reminder of the importance of relaxation and self-care.

From "Evil Dive" to "Kitty's Hurling," in My Cats, August Meriwether presents quirky observations of his home-bound feline kingdom. His views on cat behavior are often based on real-life experiences, yet periodically on delusions induced from the dust of kitty litter. As with other stories of unsavory behavior, names of the cats involved have been changed to protect the identities of the guilty. The twenty-five short poems in this collection are meant to expose the frustration of owning (tending to) cats, but Meriwether has adapted and now acknowledges with a sigh that "things happen." Each engagement with a feline requires handling them as if they are internationally recognized actors and actresses, because they are special in their own individual ways. Perhaps "Dinner Time" best describes his periodic angst: "You lick my nose. I know you're hungry. You bite my toes. I know you're hungry. You scratch, I bleed. I know you're hungry. My mouth I feed. I know you're hungry. You enlist a stare. I know you're hungry. I see your glare. I know you're hungry. You sit and purr, then run wild and prance. You call, you cry, then sideways dance. I know you're hungry....."
