In Millington Valley, Pennsylvania, five popular high school athletes have made a deadly mistake and vow never to speak of it. Piper Rose, ballet protégé, is laden with guilt and fails her college dance audition and her OCD tendencies morph into self-mutilation. She knows that confessing their misdeed would jeopardize the guys' soccer scholarships, and the possibility of love with the one who pulled the trigger.

Tensions rise, fear mounts, and in-fighting escalates as each teen deals with pangs of conscience. Ultimately, Piper must choose whether to admit their cover-up, shattering the futures of everyone else involved, or wreck her own life.

The Lying Season is a cautionary tale about how one moment can destroy lives—it's a story about choices—self-preservation over loyalty, virtue over remorse, and ultimately integrity over immorality.
