The Athlete Recruitment Process

1. Building Your Profile

The first step in the athlete recruitment process is building a compelling profile. This includes creating a standout athlete resume, highlighting your achievements, stats, and any accolades you have received. Additionally, adding videos showcasing your skills can greatly enhance your chances of getting noticed.

2. Researching the Right Opportunities

Not all opportunities will be the right fit for you. It's essential to research colleges or professional teams that align with your goals, both athletically and academically. Consider factors such as coaching staff, playing style, facilities, and academic programs offered.

3. Reaching Out to Coaches and Recruiters

Once you have identified the opportunities you are interested in, it's time to reach out to coaches and recruiters. Craft personalized emails or letters introducing yourself, expressing your interest, and providing relevant highlights from your career. Be sure to follow up and maintain regular communication.

4. Attending Showcases and Camps

Attending showcases and camps is an excellent way to get noticed by coaches and recruiters. These events offer a platform to display your skills and compete against other talented athletes. Additionally, attending such events allows you to gain exposure and build connections within the sports community.

5. Staying Committed and Focused

Athlete recruitment can sometimes be a lengthy process. It's important to remain committed and focused on your goals. Stay dedicated to your training, continue working hard, and be patient. Remember, success rarely happens overnight.

Guide Their Shot! Lorne Bowman Sr. didn't set out to write a recruitment guide for parents. He had one goal in mind when the idea for this book came about--getting his son, Lorne Jr., through high school; his son, Aaron, through middle school; and supporting his daughter. That was his focus, but then something happened. It became evident that there was an opportunity to pass along what he learned from his journey in the recruiting process to others who would eventually find themselves in the same situation. With a goal in mind to educate and to assist parents in making their journey a smooth one, Shots Up! Recruitment Guide is for you if you have a student athlete with aspirations of an advanced athletic career, because it will help you navigate your child through the maze of challenges that may lead towards a future of success. Shots UP! Will:

- Help parents to identify, handle, and groom a child that shows a skill set for the game.
- Discuss how to set boundaries for student athletes that will help them focus on their education while playing sports.
- Show you how to place your child in the best position to be noticed by recruiters.
- Explain the recruitment process from the coaches' point of view.
- Tell you how to avoid traps that can hinder your child's chances of being recruited.
